Product Development Summit

The Organization for Product Development Leaders

FOR MEMBERS

We Thought You Would Find These Articles Interesting . . .

Purpose: Save members time and keep them up to date on interesting articles.

• Cracking the Code of Innovation Bain & Company says that, when it drilled down to find the traits that successful innovation leaders share, they found five. Discover what they are.

Click to Read Full Article

• Better Designs, Faster Development Leading innovative companies treat product development as a strategic process to manage because they see it as a competitive strategy for increasing market share and accelerating growth. Learn what it takes.

Click to Read Full Article

• What You Can Learn about Innovation from Unrelated Industries Manufacturers of highly engineered products might think innovation in industries such as retail or transportation is completely unrelated to their work. Find out why it's not.

Click to Read Full Article

• Google X -- Lessons for Failure   If senior leaders at Google expect high output from the "moonshot" team charged with solving problems by a factor of 10 in a 10-year period, they would be sadly disappointed. See what you can learn.

Click to Read Full Article

• Why do Supervisors Block Innovation? There are theories about why middle managers may get in the way of innovation but, no matter what the cause, here are two things to try if you need to get around the problem.

Click to Read Full Article

• Designs Change. Deal with It! Changing a design in the middles of a project can be costly, but not changing it can cost a lot more. Software developers handle change using agile development and other engineers can take their cue. Learn more.

Click to Read Full Article